NEWS RELEASE FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

3Dsolve Welcomes Gary Baker to Advisory Board

Baker Brings Over 24 Years of Simulation and Training Program Management and Strategic Planning Experience

Cary, NC, April 13, 2005 – 3Dsolve Inc, The Simulation Learning Company, today announced that Gary Baker has joined its advisory board. Baker recently retired as a senior advisor for Camber Corporation and brings more than 24 years of experience in program management, program acquisition, contracted research and development, strategic planning and new business development, predominately in the simulation and training/modeling and simulation marketplace. Baker is also a retired United States Air Force Officer with a career in operations where he directed flying and simulator programs.

“I am honored to have the opportunity to serve on the 3Dsolve advisory board,” said Baker. “I look forward to playing a fundamental role in helping the organization build on the success it has already achieved in delivering cutting edge simulation learning solutions.”

Previously Baker served as head of Associate Contractor Integration for the international space station with The Boeing Company. While at Boeing he was responsible for coordinating all technical interaction, configuration management, interface development and program management direction between NASA, McDonnell Douglas, Rocketdyne, General Electric, Lockheed, Grumman and Boeing. Baker also served as manager of New Business Development and was accountable for contract programs, research and development efforts, engineering change proposal developments and market research. As a Headquarters Military Airlift Command Director and Commander of C-5 and C-141 squadrons, he directed flying and simulator programs for initial training of all C-5 and C-141 aircrew members.

“Baker is well respected in the simulation and training industry and brings extensive management experience in systems and element integration that will significantly enhance 3Dsolve’s existing advisory board,” said Richard Boyd, CEO of 3Dsolve. “We are fortunate to have such a diverse advisory board to help fuel the company’s continued growth and success.”

Baker holds a Bachelor of Science in Marketing from the University of Tulsa and is a graduate of Air War College, as well as an honor graduate of the Industrial College of Armed Forces and the U.S. Army Management Engineering Training Agency.
